Business is Business.
 It has been said that scribblers are not much given to enterprise, but certainly the penny-a-liner who figures in this story had a good business head. A correspondent of a certain New England newspaper having asked, through the correspondence column, "Where can I find a short sketch entitled 'The Face That Kills'?" the enterprising youth immediately tried to answer through the same column to this effect:
 "I cannot say where J. B. can find a short sketch entitled 'The Face That Kills', but upon receipt of $10 I will write a short sketch under that title whose excellence I will guarantee."—Harper's Magazine.

The Face That Kills.
 It's cur'us, but generally speakin', 'most anything is valuable if it's only scarce enough," said Uncle Nahum Weeks one day to his neighbor. "But I never expected them little skunk spruces up in my pasture was anything m'raculous till I was out to Washin'ton."

"Do they set much by 'em out there, think?" asked his neighbor, whose travels were limited to what he had walked in three counties.
 "It does look so," said Nahum. "Why, when I was there I paid considerable to see one. I wanted to see all the sights, so I hired one of them hansom cabs an driv round. The driver was a sober kind of a man, but he tuk lots of int'rest in me. I paid for the carriage by the hour. He seemed real anxious fur me to see all there was."

"Says he, 'Did you ever see a blue tree?' He was a particular speakin' man. I says, 'I never did,' an then he up an says he'd show me a regular blue tree. I thought it would be quite a sight, an I'd tell Mary about it, fur she allers liked odd plants an things."
 "Well, we driv back to the hotel, an then he stopped, an pointin with his hand, which had on a glove, says he, 'On the right is a blue tree.' Then I looked an see a little wizened, scrubby, lookin skunk spruce about 4 feet high.
 "I tuk a long look at it, an then I says, 'I guess I've seen my fill of it today. I can come agin tomorrow if I hain't.'"
 "Well, we driv back to the hotel, an when I stepped into the piazza I turned an spoke up so's most the folks sit-ting round could hear. I says, very iron-icall, 'When you get rich drivin a cab, come down east, an we'll hire a chaise an drive round an see a whole pasture full of the blue-trees.'"
 "How did he appear to take it?" asked the neighbor almost overpowered by his friend's tact.
 "Oh, he didn't understand. He smiled as perlit as ever when I paid him, an said he'd endeavor to call."—Youth's Companion.

Out of Sight.
 "Is this the bureau of information?" said Mr. Medderrgrass to the clerk at the World's fair grounds.
 "Yes, ma'am."
 "Then I wish you'd tell me where Silas is. I told that old man of mine he'd get lost, an now he's gone an done it."—Harper's Bazar.

HOME DRESSMAKING

To insure a perfect fit a lining ought to be tried on again before it is basted to the outside, the seams being left in the second time, and the whole should fit like wax. After this process it can be basted upon the outside with rather long stitches.

To cut the outside lay one side of the lining on the double fold and baste it all around lightly, but firmly, and then cut it exactly the same size as the lining, with 1/4-inch margin to turn in the front for buttons and buttonholes, and then rip it loose to baste the lining in permanently.

The lines of basting down the middle at the center of the bust are intended to draw the lining a half an inch fuller than the outside. Where the bust is unusually full a V shaped notch in the lining tapering well out toward the arm will be of great benefit to the general form, but the outside must be pulled up and down so that it does not show. Sometimes a Y is also taken under the arm. These things must be done on the judgment of the dressmaker. The diagram will show how the fullness is to be adjusted. It is really more "fullness" than gathers and is intended to cause the outside to draw a little right there at the waist line where it is so apt to wrinkle, and thus the outside remains smooth and firm.

When the gathering is done, there should be a basting down through that part directly in the center of each piece, and when that is done the bastings around each are set in a sort of overhead stitch that makes a zigzag, and this makes the firmest basting. The lining should be held inside. The bastings being now sewed around every edge and seam, the different parts can be basted together, and if it is feasible the waist can be tried on again. When the seams are basted together, they should always start from the top, and when they are done they can be stitched up on the machine, great care being taken to sew them on the outside of the bastings, as they allow a slack of about two inches.

After the waist is fitted the darts are to be cut out, allowing from one-half to three-quarters of an inch seam, according to the quality of the goods. These seams are sewed, beginning from a tapering point, and then they are laid apart and pressed flat, being neatly trimmed and bound or overcast, and bone casings are run on.

The front side pieces are held a little full under the arm, and if the bust is very full a few gathers can be set in with benefit at the top of this piece.

The top of the under arm and side back pieces are apt to get stretched, which makes a very unpleasant and inartistic bunch that nothing can correct. To prevent this run a basting thread with small stitches close to the upper edge where five x's are marked. The center back pieces must be basted together, holding them perfectly straight and plain. It is a good plan to stick a few pins at intervals to keep them from slipping or stretching. The side back seams are the most difficult of all to baste, and few of the best dressmakers even get them exact. The following rules will insure success:

1. Baste the right side first, starting at the top, holding back opposite the five x's easy, but not full, being careful not to stretch the seam at this point, as it is bias. Always hold the back next to you.

2. The back just above the waist line should be held a little full on the side-back at the same position. Before basting the left side fasten the seams together with pins two inches apart, holding the back toward you and commencing to pin from the top. Take particular care to hold the back and side pieces at the upper marked waist line exactly as you did on the right side; then baste up the seam, beginning at the bottom.

3. The under arm seam comes next. Commence at the top and holding the back toward you, at the upper waist line held full on the front, the waist line meeting. Baste the shoulder seams, holding the back to you and easing the back seam where the five x's are.

When the seams are pressed, all the fullness will disappear. The armholes should be stretched a little around the front, which will prevent wrinkles, but the best dressmakers make a crescent pad of silk or muslin filled with cotton, which fills out the hollow place under the arm.

The row of x's around the front of the armhole shows where it should be stretched, and the second row shows where the sleeve should be gathered. When all this has been done once and verified even to the alteration of any mistakes, the young dressmaker will have laid the foundation of a good workwoman, and unless she is willing to take the pains it is not worth her while to begin.

Write each person's measurement down in the little book, and in that way one can make a gown the second or third time without trying on at all.

To finish the waist the seams must be pressed, as soon as the busting stitches are out of those parts that join the pieces of the waist together, and the edges bound or neatly overcast, notches being made in the center to relieve the strain and bone casings run in when desired. Bones make a waist look much smoother, but some do not care to have them. When they are put in, they should have the ends shaved off to make them flexible and holes bored in the center with a hot needle so as to sew them strong.
